Soviet Far East Crab Canning Operations.

1. In response to your verbal request we are submitting M/AG's available information on Soviet crab canning operations of the Far East.

The only type of crab fishery in the USSR is for the king, or Kamchatka crab. The Soviet crab fishing industry is concentrated in economic region XII, particularly in the areas of Khabarovskiy Kray, Primorskiy Kray, western Kamchatskaya Oblast, south Sakhalin, and the Kuril Islands (see attachment). Crab canning operations require extensive fishing in both inshore and offshore waters, using land based facilities as well as large cannery ships operated in conjunction with flotillas of small fishing vessels. Crab fishing and canning is highly seasonal. Spring and early summer are generally the months of crabbing activities in the USSR. Soviet crab production, thousands of metric tons, selected years was as follows:

1938	19.0
1948	15.1
1953	29.1
1954	38.0
1955	38.5
1956	37.2

2. M/Ag has no information on the utilization of slave or concentration camp labor in the crab industry of the Soviet Far East. While it is known that such labor has been used in the Soviet fishing industry, it is highly unlikely that Soviet crab canneries or crab fisheries on the Kuriles or Sakhalin are currently employing concentration camp labor. Mainland canneries however, may be employing such labor.
